

'The Beam'

The University of Manchester is looking to foster and promote research in the domain of nuclear and the social sciences. 'The Beam' network has been set up by Manchester to make visible the work the University is undertaking in this area and also to provide an opportunity for others to extend the reach of their own activities across 'The Beam' network members. We wish to encourage anyone to engage with the network via this website which provides space to advertise relevant events or projects alongside an area to contribute 'thought leadership' or blog content. In addition we hope 'The Beam' network will become a vehicle to promote collaboration across industry and academia in an area we consider critical to the future of nuclear energy.

The University of Manchester is looking to foster and promote research in the domain of nuclear and the social sciences. 'The Beam' network has been set up by Manchester to make visible to external agencies the exciting work the University is undertaking in this area, and to provide an opportunity for others to extend the reach of their own activities. We wish to encourage anyone with similar interests to engage with the network via this website, which provides both space to advertise relevant events or projects, and an area where contributions on 'thought leadership' or blog content can be posted. We hope 'The Beam' network will become a vehicle to promote collaboration across industry and academia in an area we consider critical to the future of nuclear energy.
